Mr. Premjith Mathew is an experienced English teacher and CELTA-certified ESL trainer with over 20 years of teaching experience. He has taught ESL and ESP courses to learners worldwide, employing learner-centred and communicative methodologies to build fluency, confidence, and practical communication skills.

At DRBCCC Hindu College, he has created multiple academic and co-curricular platforms to strengthen students' communication abilities and currently curates student-centred lecture series in collaboration with the Department of Library. He has independently edited and produced college- and department-level newsletters and writes regularly on his blog, where he reflects on literature, pedagogy, and memory.

An active and innovative user of ICT tools such as Kahoot!, Quizlet, and Canva, he creates daily digital content, including visual summaries, infographics, research posters, and video materials to make teaching and learning engaging, accessible, and effective.

He is an independent researcher in the interdisciplinary field of Memory Studies, with a sustained academic interest in cultural memory, literary commemoration, and the politics of remembrance. He has presented papers at both national and international seminars and conferences, contributing to scholarly conversations on memory, literature, and identity. He has given talks on the topic to many colleges and universities in and around Chennai. He has also designed and presented numerous research posters and academic infographics related to Memory Studies, making complex theoretical frameworks visually accessible to wider academic audiences. He has published more than twenty issues of a newsletter known as Smriti which explores the different topics related to memory studies.

He is currently working on a proposed book on Memory Studies, along with several related research and publication projects in the field, aiming to bridge academic scholarship and public intellectual engagement.
